Comics contain a universe of socio-cultural information that researchers are only beginning to understand and categorise. In this scholarship the student will use digital humanities tools to help unravel, categorise and document some of the crucial cultural data of historical comic books.

- Tasks involved in this project may include:
- Digitising archival materials
- Categorising and cataloguing cultural material into a database
- Using software for data collection, citation and visualisation
- Researching cultural and historical background information
- Presenting information through writing and/or data visualisations

There may be some room for the project to be tailored to student's interests, skills and experience. It is expected that outcomes from the project will result in a co-authored publication, and may lead to further opportunities for research.
